It's wonderful! Load the beans and schedule when you want to start in the morning and then you will have fresh coffee. My bar trips are pretty rare right now. People complain about the steam coming into the grinder compartment. Although I have to agree that it would be nice if they had solved this problem, it's no big deal. Just the pieces... Not rocket science. I've always been a coffee after using it anyway, so again, no problem. I was rather worried about that because of all the complaints. All this means however that when you put the beans and then they are made to grind and descend into the next compartment, there is a small residual coffee film left by the beans and then steam enters. It's a big deal. rinse. When I use my stand alone grinder for coffee, I always washed it after I was ground anyway. The noise of the grinder might wake you up, but I put mine down ten minutes before I woke up for a really fresh coffee. The carafe is smaller than the coffee. I used to have the Cuisinart DTC-975BKN model, which still works, but doesn't grind itself, and I got lazy to do it. For us, we have always thrown the coffee out with the other model, but with the grinder and beer there is only enough for two cups of travel and two cups of coffee. If you are looking for a bigger plate, do not get this steel carafe model then. My children have the glass model of carafe and beer and I think it holds more coffee. All in all, for the lazy factor of wanting fresh prepared coffee and not having to grind the beans you..... we are really satisfied with this product. You won't be unhappy. Just remember to remove the bean support, the top of the grinder basket and then you're all set! I don't think we pass through the coffee beans anymore what we did when we put our beans and coffee all the time.
