Last year, Facebook combined personal posts in WhatsApp, Facebook Messenger and Instagram on one messaging platform. While each application remains a separate symbol in the phone application in the library, users can now communicate with each other and take advantage of a new feature and end line encryption parameters. Due to the upcoming changes in the What Protection Guidelines, it also means that WhatsApp user data will be transferred to Facebook and its partners from February 8th. Facebook, Instagram or Messenger. Facebook informs WhatsApp users about changes when notifying the application, but does not explain which types of Facebook data collect using WhatsApp user. To ensure this, a new Privacy Directive needs to be read on the WhatsApp site. According to the latest version published on January 4, 2021, Facebook is now collecting the following information from all WhatsApp accounts: Account information, including its name and phone number. Your IP address. The devices you use in WhatsApp. This communication with other users and companies. Notice to you or based on your consent. This is a big change compared to the previous WhatsApp confectionary guideline with which users can hand over their data with Facebook and continue using the application. Unfortunately, the new guideline requires users to either accept changes or no longer use the application after the February 8th Guideline Update. WhatsApp Obtaining a starter. Facebook is not completely free of confidentiality and user data, and some of us simply do not want to be related to the big company ecosystems, such as:Last year, Facebook merged Whatsapp, Facebook Messenger and Instagram Private Messages in a single email platform. Although each application is always a separate icon in the telephone application library, users can now chat with each other on the platform and enjoy new features and full encryption options. However, due to the upcoming changes in WhatsApp's privacy policy, this also means that WhatsApp users will be shared with Facebook and its partners from February 8. This applies to all WhatsApp users, even if they do not use Facebook, Instagram or Messenger.

Facebook informs WhatsApp users of changes in the notification of the application, but does not explain what types of Facebook data will collect, which WhatsApp users will collect. To find it, you must read the new privacy policy of WhatsApp. According to the latest version published on January 4, 2021, Facebook will now collect the following information on all WhatsApp accounts: account registration information, including your name and telephone number. Information on IP.Network and Service Addresses. Technical information on the device used on the WhatsApp site. Communication data with other users and companies.

To inform you or on the basis of your consent. This is a big change compared to the previous privacy policy of WhatsApp, which allowed users to refuse to share their data with Facebook and continue to use the application. Unfortunately, the new policy requires that users agree to modify or stop using the application once the policy has been updated on February 8. Naturally, many users are dissatisfied with the privacy policy, the combination of platforms or even the launch of WhatsApp on Facebook. Facebook is not exactly a clean rap page with regard to confidentiality and user data, and some of us do not want to be associated with ecosystems of large companies likeLet's look at the alternative to WhatsApp and Facebook Messenger, which will allow you to clearly stop the multiple chat universe on Facebook. Signalsignal is an application for sending a message, which is often recommended due to high confidentiality, user security and transparency.
