Whether you have been a photographer for many years or no, you should start this process by finding a printing company where you can create and print your business cards. Check your contact information and add your logo in a PNG or SVG format, according to your printer's needs. All types of logos can be used to create a logo for a photography business; it depends on what you want to focus on. For example, combination mark logos that are made up of the business name and a symbol are popular for businesses. Also, wordmark logos, logos made up only of your business name, could be an interesting option if you want to focus on your name. Here are a few basic tips: your logo should be simple, recognizable, flexible, distinctive, and timeless. Avoid any unnecessary details, so your logo can be reproduced easily whatever the medium. You should not use more than three different colors or more than two fonts if you want the final result to be well balanced. This should help you create a perfect logo for your photography business. BrandCrowd offers thousands of professionally made and customizable logo templates. You can get free logos and premium logos quickly and easily. If you're in the photography industry — say a wedding photography website, a portrait studio, a magazine business, a photo app developer, a lens or shutter manufacturer, or anything related to the glamorous world of videography and photography, then the BrandCrowd Photography logo maker can help you out. On the logo maker, there are well-known photo-related icons such as lenses, cameras, phones, light bulbs, picture frames, etc. Since it's customizable, you can reimagine the template to your ideal logo image. Change the color, size, shape, and font style of the original template, and voilà! You'll have a completely modified template, perfect and suitable for your brand image. Visit the free logo maker now, and download free logos, apart from cheap premium logo designs. Within minutes, your photography business is ready and running. For unlimited use purchase the source files for €35.00 According to recent statistics provided by Google Trends, the concept of "saving money" has continued to be a dominant consideration among consumers across the world. And unfortunately, photographers have not been exempt from this penny-pinching mentality — even when it comes to major events like weddings, bar mitzvahs and anniversaries or the more specialty fields of photography like wildlife, urban/industrial and even stock images. Among the ways successful freelance photographers have found to cope with this trend include: establishing a specialized niche for their work and delivering higher levels of value through enhanced customer service. But in order to effectively compete with the countless other shutterbugs vying for the same events and subjects, many professionals have turned to personal branding. Opens a new window and, specifically, a unique photography logo. Narrowing the panorama with professional photography logos. Whether you specialize in weddings or are camped out to get a shot of the elusive Beck's petrel (a rare bird), the backbone of every good marketing initiative, PR campaign and website development is building the brand around a simple yet memorable image. As a photographer, you may assume you can simply use one of your images, right? Not necessarily. Here are four photography logo ideas to keep in mind: Start by listing the words that describe your business. What kind of photography do you specialize in? Artsy? Black and white? Aerial? Then list words related to your customer? Who are they? What do they expect from your services? This list will give you a solid framework for choosing fonts, graphics and developing a tag line. Opens a new window. Though your completed logo doesn't necessarily have to be one color, it should be easy to convert to a solid color (or even black and white if necessary). In doing so, you'll be able to use it in print mediums where color may either be unavailable or too costly. Here's a great place to recruit friends, family and even trusted clients. Always attempting to keep it as clean as possible. Opens a new window. Photography logos should be both memorable and appealing to the eye, striking a balance between text and art. This is exponentially more important for photographers as your services are built around quality images. And a photography logo that looks anything less will imply the same of your work. Your logo will be used on a variety of marketing materials. Opens a new window. Therefore, you want to make sure it looks as good on a billboard as it does on a business card or website. The surest way of achieving this goal is to keep all the elements as clean and simple as possible. When you create photography logos, always remember that your finished design may end up being reduced to the size of a quarter. So don't worry about spending time on intricate details. Save that for your work! When it comes time to implement your photography business logo you'll need files like JPG, PNG, PDF and vector format. When your web designer or printer asks you for a specific file type or sizing you can return to GraphicSprings to get access to those formats. Helpful Tips on How to Create a Beautiful Photography Logo Design If you are new to designing logos these next few tips will come in handy. Our onboarding process and templates will give you a great foundation to come up with your very own custom logo. Keeping the tips below in mind will help ensure you end up with a timeless logo design. A Simple Photography Logo Graphic is More Memorable When it comes to graphics we offer a wide range of design styles and details for your own logo. Generally, you want to lean towards graphics that use clean lines and aren't overly complex. Of course for certain industries and types of businesses an intricate design is appropriate. A simple graphic is more memorable than a complicated design so keep that in mind for your overall branding vision. The camera is a common photography logo symbol, but it's important to find the right balance between genericness and uniqueness. If you want your brand identity as an agency or photography studio focused on different types of work, with various clients, then avoid using symbols like this because they'll only box you in as a brand. Choose a Core Color and Stick with It Decide on a core color that represents you, your art style, and your business well. As a rule of thumb you don't want to use more than three different colors in your custom photography logo design. Sticking to a core color and using 1-2 accent colors will ensure you fall within that guideline. This is not to say you can't use more colors but in keeping with creating a simple and memorable brand less is more. When choosing the right colors for your brand, think about what you want to convey. If it's a more light-hearted feel then go with bright and happy hues. If elegant simplicity is called for in an industrial setting use dark tones instead. With GraphicSprings it's easy to choose color combinations that work for your photography logo. Here are some specific examples. When you're shooting outdoors or in natural settings, try using earth tones for a more authentic look. For portraits of people who want their own personality shown through the camera lens (i.e., children), black & white is often best since it allows room to imagine how they will appear while wearing any outfit. Keep this in mind when choosing your brand colors. Select the Right Fonts and Pair Them Well Just like with color and your graphic, font choice should be deliberate. Carefully choose a main font for your company name and then pair it with a tagline typeface. Sticking to 2-3 fonts for your business name and slogan is your safest bet. You now have a design photography brand clients will know and remember! Serifs are often used in creative photography studios, fashion photographers, and wedding photography. You can also try going with a custom font if you want to emphasize your creative side; just make sure it's one that has easy-to-use features so the final product looks good both big or small! Now that you are equipped with tips for your own photography logo design it's time to have some fun with our logo maker. Put what you learned into action and make your own photography logos today. It will only take a few minutes. Once you are done click download to access your high-res photography logo. It's really that simple!
