This list includes biblical schools and other schools with strong biblical programs. Even all biblical schools on this list are Schools, but not all Christian schools here are biblical schools. These two overlap a lot, but there are some important differences between them. The "bible schools" are essentially training schools specialized in the Bible. Meanwhile, Christian Liberal Arts Schools such as Biola, Liberty or Regent, dedicate a considerable time and energy towards a well-rounded education, including science, mathematics, history, literature, art and so Street. Christian schools can have great programs in the Bible, but are not simply focused on the Bible as the Bible schools are. Students can graduate from liberal arts schools with a degree outside the Bible or Ministry, perhaps only taking one or two core core in the Bible. Liberal arts schools also tend to incorporate a lot of non-biblical influences from philosophy, science, literature and cultural studies. Somehow this variety can explore biblical implications and applications and can even illuminate their own reading of the biblical text.bible schools, on the other hand, focuses their curriculum to study and understand the Bible itself. These schools are generally liberal arts (except for Cedarville university), are special schools. Therefore, there is no width measure, but compensate it deeply, with more biblical lessons, more blink studio, and more institutional focus on the Bible. Students of these schools are required to take Bible Core classes, even if they choose the most peripheral "non-biblical" major. Bible schools also tend to identify themselves with a named or a theological tradition. The result is that the colleges of the Bible reserves the time and focus to immerse themselves deep and explore their school of thought. Biblical schools, such as Moody, Baptist Bible College and Emmaus, identify most or all their degree programs in some fields of the Bible, missions or training of the ministry. Collectively, the schools of Christian schools and schools of the Bible serve a vital role in faith and learning in America, and many Christian colleges are expanding their scope with online degree programs. Historically, many Christian schools have grown from the spiritual morass left behind when traditionally Christian colleges - such as Harvard, Princeton, Yale, and William and MaryÁ e á, ~ "violated a secular direction from their Christian roots. And the movement of the school bible Specifically can be traced largely at Dwight L. Moody and Moody Bible Institute. The Christian and Biblical schools gradually grew at the end of 19th and at the beginning of the 20th century. Today we find emerging Christian and biblical schools constantly as a one Contra-cultural trend that enhances the focused training of the Bible in higher education.
